School Libraries are an oasis of stillness in an endlessly shifting, taxing, noisy sandstorm of lessons and endless 'other people'. They're somewhere a person can think like an individual and make unexpected, pleasurable discoveries. A school librarian is a neutral figure - often a friend and confidante rather than a teacher with 'expectations' of you. You can be in cahoots with them in exploring your personal tastes. A school librarian is Anansi who steals the Sky Blue Storybox, opens it for friends to share, and is very, very canny.
